To all those that every day work hard to take care of our country's natural resources.

I've watched what the wardens on wild justice, the television show do to protect the states natural resources. Because of this show, I have a new respect for the men and women who protect our resources threw out this country. I do not live in the state of California, but feel safe in saying, that all our states in this country, are attempting to protect our natural resources much the same as California. My only complaint is that the people who are poaching and knowingly breaking the laws, repeat offenders, those on probation, are not dealt with more harshly. It's obvious many of these offenders are working the system, and should be dealt with in such a way they think about consequences a little bit more, maybe they would think twice, before they go and do something stupid. I am grateful for the men and women who put there lives on the line, to help protect innocent wildlife and public lands from some of the saddest examples of people that feel it's ok to go around taking advantage, and abusing what most of us treasure, and know is so important to our world. You are greatly respected and appreciated for all you do.
